AYLESFORD
KENT

This attractive village has one of the oldest bridges over the River Medway, built in 1390. A wharf, one of several along the Medway for loading corn, fruit, stone and timber was built here, and The Friars, a Carmelite Priory founded in 1240, now restored as a retreat and conference centre is close by.

IVINGHOE BEACON
CHILTERNS

This hill is the site of an Iron Age hill-fort and a prominent landmark in the Chilterns, with far-reaching views. Set in an area of wildflower-rich chalk grasslands and ancient woodlands spread across rolling hills, it is part of the NT Ashridge Estate and the start/end of the Ridgeway trail.

BRATTON CAMP, WESTBURY
WILTSHIRE

An Iron Age hillfort was built at Bratton Camp over 2,000 years ago. Overlooking the town of Westbury is the White Horse chalk hill figure, probably first cut in the late 17th century, a famous landmark, visible from afar. Today, the extensive chalk grassland supports herb and grass species that provide a habitat for a diverse range of insects.

BROADWAY
WORCESTERSHIRE

This picturesque village lies below Fish Hill on the western Cotswolds escarpment and on the 102-mile Cotswold Way National Trail. Its name comes from the long, wide, grass-fringed High Street, one of the longest in England, lined with mainly 16th century houses in mellow Cotswold stone and horse chestnut trees.

EPPING FOREST
ESSEX

Seen here resplendent in autumn foliage, Epping Forest is an ancient woodland and former royal hunting forest. It lies on a ridge between the valleys of the rivers Lea and Roding and contains 6,000 acres of woodland, grassland, heath, streams, bogs and ponds – the largest public open space in the London area.

PORTH NANVEN
CORNWALL

Smoothly contoured rocks washed by waves at sunset at Porth Nanven in the far west of Cornwall. This secluded cove is known as the 'Dinosaur Egg beach' because of the unusual egg-shaped granite boulders which cover the beach and foreshore, deposited by the sea.
